Indo–European languages. The most important linguistic family of the globe, comprising the chief languages of Europe together with the Indo-Iranian and other Asiatic tongues. In the 19th century, comparative and historical study of these languages, called also Indo-Germanic or Aryan, established their descent from a common ancestor, spoken in the late Stone Age, probably in eastern Europe, by a people or group of peoples of unknown, perhaps mixed, race. This unrecorded language and, in some degree, the civilization and religion of those who spoke it, have been largely hypothetically reconstructed by scientific philological method. The prehistoric dialects of the primitive Indo-Europeans accompanied their migrations into India, Persia, Greece, Rome, and the western borders of Europe, where they are found at the beginning of history. The parent speech was highly inflected, but historically the general tendency of the Indo-European languages has been toward the analytic type, as in French or English. The broadest classification of these languages is that into two great divisions, the centum and the satem, depending, among other criteria, upon the development of prehistoric palatal gutturals into stops, or mutes, in the western division, and into spirants, or sibilants, in the eastern, as illustrated by the word for hundred (for example, Latin centum, pronounced kentum, but Avestan satem). They are further classified into eight main subfamilies, as shown in the Table herewith. Cf. ARYAN, SOGDIAN, TOCHARIAN.

A simple example of jet propulsion is the motion given to an inflated toy balloon when the compressed air is allowed to escape through the neck. A jet airplane, or jet plane, may be powered by a jet engine that utilizes the surrounding air in the combustion of fuel or by a jet engine of the rocket type that carries its fuel and all the oxygen necessary for combustion, and therefore functions independently of atmospheric oxygen. — jet'-pro·pul'sion, adj. — jet'-pro·pelled', adj.

Jewish calendar. A lunisolar calendar in use among Hebraic peoples, reckoning from the year 3761 B.C., the date traditionally given for the Creation. It received its present fixed form from Hillel II about A.D. 360. Nineteen years constitute a lunar cycle, of which the 3d, 6th, 8th, 11th, 14th, 17th, and 19th years are leap years. The year 5682 [A.D. 1921–22] was the first year of the 300th lunar cycle. The common year is said to be a defective, regular, or perfect (or abundant) year according as it has 353, 354, or 355 days. The leap year has an intercalary month, and a total of 383 (defective), 384 (regular), or 385 (perfect, or abundant) days. The calendar is complicated by various rules providing for the harmonious arrangement of festivals, etc. (see JEWISH HOLIDAYS), so that no simple perpetual calendar can be constructed. The following table gives the months in order, with the number of days assigned to each. Only three months vary in length. The ecclesiastical year commences with Nisan and the civil year with Tishri. The date of the first of Tishri, or the Jewish New Year (Rosh Hashana), is also given for the Jewish years 5706–5723 (A.D. 1945–1962). From these tables it is possible to transform any Jewish date into Christian, or vice versa, for the years A.D. 1945–1962.

The unit of length, the meter, was intended to be, and is very nearly, one ten-millionth part of the distance measured on a meridian from the equator to the pole, or 39.37 U. S. inches. Upon the meter are based the other primary units of measure: the square meter, the cubic meter, or stere, the are (100 square meters), the liter (the volume of a kilogram of distilled water at 4° C., equal to 1.000027 cubic decimeters), and the gram (the weight, very nearly, of distilled water at 4° C. contained in a cube whose edge is one hundredth of a meter). The Greek prefix deca-, or deka-, before a unit means ten; hecto-, one hundred; kilo-, one thousand; myria-, ten thousand; mega-, one million; thus, a *hecto*meter is 100 meters. Similarly, the Latin prefix deci- before a unit means one tenth; centi-, one hundredth; milli-, one thousandth; and micro-, one millionth; thus, a *centi*gram is one hundredth of a gram. See also Tables at MEASURE and WEIGHT.

TABLES OF MONETARY UNITS AND DENOMINATIONS

WITH VALUES OF FOREIGN UNITS IN U. S. CURRENCY

NOTE. The value of the currency of one country may be expressed in that of any other country by comparison of the amount of gold in their monetary units (the gold content). In the following Tables the par value of the monetary unit (printed in italic type) is in some cases determined on this basis, and the value given in U. S. currency (without a following asterisk) in the third column. In many countries, however, the par values have been determined by the International Monetary Fund, established as an agency of the United Nations in July 1944; such values are indicated in the third column by an asterisk. In the disturbed conditions of recent years the various governments of the world have used quite different methods in controlling their currency, so that there could be no uniform basis for reckoning; hence, world trade has been conducted on the basis of actual exchange rates (see rate of exchange, under EXCHANGE, 5 d), which may change from day to day and which may vary considerably over a given period of time. No attempt is made in the Tables below to give the exchange value of the monetary unit; for the accurate present value of any particular coin unit, and hence the denominations dependent upon it, the daily newspapers should be consulted. By law the gold content of the U. S. dollar was fixed (Jan. 31, 1934) at 15 238 grains of gold, or $35.00 to a fine ounce; the British sovereign contains 113 grains. Because gold to a great amount is held in reserve by the chief governments of the world, few gold coins have in recent years actually been minted or remain in circulation. Paper money and silver are most widely used for the higher denominations, aluminum-bronze and nickel for coins of smaller value, and bronze, copper, and alloys for the coins of lowest value.

TABLE OF NUMBERS

1. Cardinal numbers are shown in the first three columns of the Table. First the names of the cardinal numbers are given; then the Arabic symbols (Arabic numerals) for them, as commonly used in arithmetic; next the Roman symbols (Roman numerals), used for dates, for introductory pages in books, upon the dials of timepieces, etc.; as in: the year MCMLIII (1953); page lxvi. The cardinal numbers are used in simple counting, or in answer to the question, "How many?" They give no information about the kind of things counted, or about the order in which they are counted, or about any relation they may have to each other.

The words for these numbers may be used as nouns (he counted to twelve) or as adjectives (twelve boys). A number word is often used for a thing that is made up of the number of parts shown by the number word used, or that is marked with the figure or with the number of spots, marks, etc., shown by this word. Thus, a seven is sometimes used for a billiard ball with a 7 on it or for a playing card with seven spots, a five is used for a basketball team (which has five men), an eight for a racing crew in rowing, a nine for a baseball team, and so on.

2. Ordinal numbers are shown in the fourth and fifth columns of the Table. These names are formed usually by adding the suffix -th or -eth to the name of the corresponding cardinal number. The names of the ordinal numbers for 1 and 2, however, come from different words, and those for 3, 5, 8, 9, 12, 20, etc., have become more or less changed. The ordinal numbers are used (as adjectives or as nouns) to show the order or succession in which names, objects, periods of time, or the like, are considered; as, the twelfth month; the fourth in a row of seats; the 18th century.

3. Fractions (not shown in the Table). A fraction is one or more of the equal parts into which a unit, or an object or group of objects, may be divided. When written, a simple fraction consists of two numbers divided by a line (½ or $\frac{1}{2}$, ¾ or $\frac{3}{4}$). The figure below the line (denominator) shows the total number of equal parts into which a unit is divided, the figure above the line (numerator) shows how many of these equal parts of the fraction are taken. Thus, the fraction ¾ (read "three fourths") indicates 3 of the 4 equal parts into which the unit is divided. The number one is unity or a complete whole. The fraction of a complete whole divided into two equal parts is one half (½); the names of the denominators of other fractions are the same as those of the corresponding ordinal numbers; as, one third (⅓); one fourth (¼); seven eighths (⅞) of the people present; a dime is one tenth ($\frac{1}{10}$) of a dollar.

4. Decimals or decimal fractions (not shown in the Table). A decimal or decimal fraction is a proper fraction in which the denominator is some power of 10, usually not expressed, but signified by a point (decimal point) placed at the left of the numerator; as, .2 = $\frac{2}{10}$, .25 = $\frac{25}{100}$, .025 = $\frac{25}{1000}$. There are as many places to the right of the decimal point as there are ciphers in the denominator; as, $\frac{88}{1000}$ is written .0088. The decimal .25 may also be expressed by the fraction ¼ or by 25% (see PER CENT).
